Recognized for exceptional service as School Resource Officer . . .

Deputy Jon Tindal receives national award

The REPORTER

Hamilton County Sheriff's Office Deputy Jon Tindal was presented with the Regional Exceptional Service Award by the National Association of School Resource Officers during the organization's annual conference in Washington, D.C. on July 25. The award is a competitive process which recognizes outstanding contributions to the school resource program and dedication to the school community.

Deputy Tindal, who serves as School Resource Officer for Hamilton Heights Middle School in Arcadia, was nominated for the Regional Exceptional Service Award by Indiana School Resource Officer Association 2nd Vice President, Sgt. D.J. Schoeff of the Carmel Police Department. In nominating Tindal for the award, Schoeff commented not only on Tindal's daily work with the students, teachers and parents, but also on the creation of the "Dawg Pound" at the school.

During his duties as SRO at the school, Deputy Tindal observed many of the students had little personal interaction with each other. Even during lunch time in the cafeteria, Tindal noticed an unusually quiet atmosphere which he attributed to students focusing almost exclusively on social media devices and cell phones. Tindal decided to use his creativity and passion for promoting positive behaviors to encourage students to interact with each other and to include those often left on the fringes.

Coordinating with school administrators, Deputy Tindal obtained permission to transform an empty storage room into what is now called the Dawg Pound. Several local businesses provided donations of materials and finances as Tindal and a group of volunteers cleaned, painted and furnished the room. The room transformed from an unused space into a vibrant room, painted with school colors and the school mascot. At no cost to the school or taxpayers, the room now boasts a popcorn maker, two Xbox units, a large screen TV complete with a surround-sound system and numerous games.

The Dawg Pound is a "device-free" zone where students are not allowed to use cell phones, tablets, or other similar devices. Tindal encourages students to use the games and equipment as a means for direct interaction as they engage

Mental health in Fishers, the real issue

By LARRY LANNAN
www.LarryInFishers.com

Mayor Scott Fadness began his Mental Health Initiative Report to the Community Monday afternoon with some statistics and stories from the previous week. When police arrive at the scene of a resident suffering a mental health episode that is serious, that person is subject to what is termed in law enforcement parlance an "immediate detention."

The mayor said one immediate detention run was for a person suffering from depression and schizophrenia, feeling down and seeking help. Another run involved a woman reporting her daughter had sent suicidal messages that were "concerning," finding a gun on the stairway. In yet another, a suicidal man was attacking himself with a knife and was bleeding. Another man was threatening suicide over the recent breakup with his girlfriend.

So there was a total of seven immediate detentions in Fishers during one week in July. The mayor said there were 11 suicides in Fishers during 2016 and five so far in 2017.

That set for the stage for the panel discussion led by the mayor to talk about the accomplishments of his two-and-a-half year initiative to deal with mental health issues in Fishers.

During the panel discussion, Dr. Suzanne Clifford of Inspiring Transformations said suburbia, in general, is ignored

'Flyover' road coming to 146th Street

Hamilton County motorists who drive 146th Street and wish to head south on Keystone toward Indianapolis should be happy to hear that a new section of roadway to access southbound Keystone from 146th will be well underway by this time next year.

The elevated link, sometimes called a 'flyover' will be less than a half-mile long, but will make a critical link essentially extending Lowe's Way to the south over northbound Keystone and then curve into the southbound lanes of Keystone where drivers encounter no stoplights until reaching 96th Street.

(Currently it is more difficult to get onto the popular parkway, with motorists having to use 151st Street in order to get on U.S. 31 which has an exit for Keystone.)

County Highway Director Brad Davis prefers to call the project a Lowe's Way extension. Bids will be taken in February, and likely be awarded in March. He reports that about $4 million in federal funds will help pay the estimated $12 million cost of the Lowe's Way connection.

Hamilton County recognized for e-government solutions

The REPORTER

Hamilton County has been honored by the Center for Digital Government and the National Association of Counties for its efforts to streamline delivery of government services using technology.

The county placed eighth in its size category in the 15th annual Digital Counties Survey, which recognizes the best technology practices nationwide.

"Digital counties are leveraging technology to improve the ways they conduct business and engage with citizens in increasingly innovative and exciting ways,"

Center for Digital Government Executive Director Todd Sander said in a news release announcing the honorees. "The Center for Digital Government congratulates this year's winners for their work to reduce costs, encourage citizen engagement, increase efficiencies and proactively address citizen expectations."

Ten winners were named in each of five population categories. Hamilton County competed in the third-largest group, against other counties with 250,000-499,999 residents. Douglas County, Col., placed first in the category. No other Indiana counties recognized the value of technology as a cost-effective way to enhance services. Over time, the county has been judiciously implementing e-government solutions.

It has been recognized with a Digital County Award in 14 out of the last 15 years. Hamilton County did not enter in 2016.

"This is not a quick or easy task, but we are committed to serving you in the most effective manner possible," said Chris Mertens, director of Information Technology for the county. "Please rest assured that we are moving in the right direction, for the right reasons."

Candidate asks for help with getting precinct committee list

Dear Editor:

For all my friends in Carmel, Westfield, Noblesville and Fishers, as of today and after multiple requests to our county party chair; I still have not received a copy of the District 20 Precinct Committee list of those that will have a vote in the upcoming Senate D20 caucus.

I have filed and declared . . . it's official.

I need a grassroots effort from you and your friends in asking why a viable candidate is not given access to what other candidates have been given in this caucus.

Each precinct committee member has already received countless letters, already have had countless phone calls & conversations with and have had face-to-face time with the other candidates.

All the other candidates have received a copy of the list, but I have not.

As of today (and since my original & countless requests starting on July 10th); I have not been given access to the list of precinct committee members who will make this vote in the upcoming Senate D20 Caucus.

My request of you is this, please reach out to your District 20 Precinct Committee member and ask him/her to give me the opportunity to discuss the ideas, visions and line on District 20 and give me a fair process in this caucus. I'm only asking for the same fair & equal treatment as the other candidates have been given.

Without this opportunity and fundamental right as a candidate, then our county chair "may" have broken her campaign promises on making our county party more unified, transparent and fair to all eligible & qualified candidates seeking an elected office.

What are your thoughts?

Joe Morris

each other in friendly competition and social situations. Students of all ages and abilities come together without exclusion as they enjoy the company of new friends and acquaintances. Tindal notes he has observed students that typically struggle socially now blossoming and thriving with other students in the Dawg Pound.

Use of the Dawg Pound comes in various ways with students rewarded with lunch in the room in return for positive behaviors in the classroom. Teachers also use the Dawg Pound as a reward for students completing tasks and work. One teacher had several missing assignments by a student successfully completed after students learned time in the Dawg Pound was a potential reward.

The Hamilton County Sheriff's Office partners with the Hamilton Heights School Corporation to assign three full-time school resource officers. The deputies not only offer security and threat prevention but also seek to foster positive relationships with the school community as the deputies provide educational and outreach programs throughout the year.

COUNTY LINE

A second, future phase of the project will take the improvement to the north end of existing Range Line Road to allow direct access from 146th to Range Line, the main route into downtown Carmel. There is also good news for the highway department from Purdue University estimates of revenue coming to the county from the state increase in gas tax and other fees adopted by state legislation this year.

Davis said estimates show about $3 million next year for the county. Actual disbursements will reportedly start in August of this year, and would appear to amount to something over $1 million yet this year. This money is for the county unit only, and does not include disbursements to the eight cities and towns in Hamilton County. The formula used for these additional payments is the same that is used for disbursement of currently allocated gas tax revenues.

in the area of mental health services. She added that, of all places, Silicon Valley in California contains a “cluster” of suicides.

Dr. Bernice A. Pescosolido was the keynote speaker for the luncheon, held at Launch Fishers. She described how stigma devalues a person as a human being, separating the stigmatized person from the rest of society. She has worked to deal with the stigma felt by those needing treatment for mental health issues.

“The only way to reduce stigma and to improve the lives of people with mental health is to do multi-level, long-term changes, because societies change slowly,” Dr. Pescosolido said.

Dr. Pescosolido has worked nationally on the issue of mental health stigma, even working on such stigma that exists within the medical profession.

Mayor Fadness said the issue of mental health in the growing suburban city of Fishers is “real.” He made clear his initiative to address mental health in his city is far from over.

Tips for soothing fussy babies

StatePoint

Parents dealing with a fussy baby — especially one that has been recently fed, changed and loved — are eager to find ways to soothe them.

Fortunately, child sleep expert, Kim West, a Licensed Clinical Social Worker, better known as The Sleep Lady, has helped thousands of families gently soothe their fussy little ones and find sleep for more than 20 years. To help keep your baby happy and calm, Graco hired West to offer the following soothing tips:

Learn baby's sleepy cues

Most babies up to six months old can only be awake for about one to two hours before becoming overtired. Part of the learning curve is being able to recognize a child's typical sleepy cues, so that you can move them to a safe sleep space as soon as possible. These signs may include yawning, staring, fussiness, quieting down, losing interest in playtime, eye rubbing, and hand sucking. An alert or spirited child may move very quickly from happy to tired to overtired, so keeping one eye on the clock is also important. Be prepared to move straight to naptime or bedtime as soon as you see your child's sleepy cues.

Recognize baby's sleep patterns

When your baby is about three or four months old, you may start to see a glimmer of a schedule forming where sleeping and waking are concerned. This is because your baby's internal clock — the circadian rhythm — is starting to develop. Look for this pattern, along with your baby's sleep cues, and create a soothing naptime and bedtime routine, which can include white noise, feeding and rocking.

Nap timing and length are often the last components of a baby's schedule to develop, so you might need to use more effort and additional soothing techniques in the afternoon when getting a little one to sleep can be particularly challenging.

Use motion to calm

Motion is a favorite of babies for soothing because it likely reminds them of the sensations and security of their mother's womb. Movement will often do what no other kind of soothing can do, so it's a good technique to try. Rock your baby in your arms when you can, but if you need a break to get things done around the house or during times of extended fussiness, consider using a swing. Since every baby is unique, try a swing that has multiple motion options, such as the Graco EveryWay Soother with Removable Rocker. With 16 soothing motions, six different speeds, two vibration settings and 15 songs and sounds, parents can create a personalized soothing environment to calm their little one. As an added benefit, the swing's seat conveniently doubles as a removable rocker to keep baby happy and close by anywhere in the house. This swing is now exclusively available at Babies "R" Us.

Understand crankiness

Babies cry when they're uncomfortable, bored, overstimulated and sleepy. There are a few things you can do to try and figure out why your baby is crying. Beyond the obvious diaper and mealtime reasons, try a change of scenery. You can also try dimming the lights, turning on white noise, placing your baby in a swing or offering them a pacifier.

Being prepared to tailor your soothing strategies to your child's individual needs can help provide both you and your baby more relaxing days and nights.

At work all day? How to incorporate exercise into your life

StatePoint

Leading a sedentary lifestyle can have a serious impact on one's health. In fact, too much sitting can increase your risk of cardiovascular disease, according to the American Heart Association, which cites a study that showed that adults who watch more than four hours of television daily had a 46 percent increased risk of death and an 80 percent increased risk of cardiovascular disease.

Unfortunately, work environments are not always conducive to physical activity, with tight deadlines and long to-do lists often gluing people to their work stations for hours on end.

If you spend a majority of the day at work, here are some great ways to move more during your free time.

Go beyond traditional exercise

Becoming active doesn't necessarily mean limiting yourself to elliptical machines and running laps. Find outlets for exercise that excite you, such as hip-hop dance, yoga or even kickboxing. If you want to add a bit of competition to the mix, long distance races or obstacle courses may be just the motivation you need. Such events can be a great excuse to travel, as they take place all over the world.

Get active with co-workers

Many experts agree that leaning on friends and co-workers as exercise partners can help boost motivation. In fact, the exercise habits of people you know have a positive influence on your own routine, according to a study published in "Psychology of Sport and Exercise."

Luckily, there are new and fun ways you can get active as a group. For example, to help you and your co-workers get moving, Aflac, the official supplemental insurance provider for Tough Mudder, is taking team building to the next level by inviting co-workers to participate in these high-endurance obstacle course challenges as a team. "The Small Business Challenge" encourages employees to enter on behalf of their company by sharing how teamwork has helped them succeed. If the employees and their business win, they will receive complimentary tickets to participate in a Tough Mudder event and put their teamwork skills and athletic ability to the test. You can find the official rules and enter for a chance to win at toughmudder.com/aflac.

Squeeze it in

Long workdays are just a reality for many. So, find ways to get your blood flowing while you're working. Set an alarm that reminds you on the hour to move around or stretch. Consider a desk that converts to a standing position so you can be on your feet a portion of the day. Use the stairs. There are many ways to squeeze in short bouts of exercise that allow you to continue being productive.

Do your heart and health a favor and get moving. With so many great new forms of exercise and athletic competition available today, spending time outside of work engaged in physical activity is easier than ever before.

Swimming...

Carmel picks up two wins at Senior State Meet

Indiana's club swimming championship is underway, beginning with the Senior State Meet, which took place last weekend at Purdue University.

To one's surprise, the Carmel Swim Club had a dominant tournament in the Boilermaker's aquatic center. Carmel's relays led the way, with the men's 800 freestyle team of Wyatt Davis, Jake Mitchell, Andrew Couchon, Drew Kibler winning that race. Also, the women's 400 freestyle relay team of Trude Rothrock, Rachel Hayden, Emma Nordin, Kelly Pash finished first in that event.

Swimmers from all of the major Hamilton County clubs competed, with every one of them notching at least one top 32 finish. A partial listing is below; the remaining results will be published in Thursday's edition of the Reporter.

Dallas comeback stuns Fever

Skylar Diggins-Smith scored 21 points to lead the Dallas Wings to a late comeback and 84-82 win over the Indiana Fever at College Park Center. Dallas won its third straight home game in what was the first game for both teams following the WNBA All-Star Break.

Dallas overcame a 63-53 deficit after three quarters to rally to a win in the final minute of regulation, getting past a Fever club that shot over 50 percent for the game. Diggins-Smith scored eight points in the final period and rookie Allisha Gray added 10 of her 12 during the Wings' 31-19 assault in the fourth quarter.

After shooting 32 percent over three periods, the Wings whittled their way back into contention with 60 percent shooting in the final quarter, and tied the score at 80 on a jumper by Glory Johnson. Kayla Thornton's baseline drive gave the Wings their first lead of the second half, but Indiana's Erica Wheeler knotted things at 82. Gray's 16-footer gave the Wings their final lead with 45 seconds to play.

But the Fever weren't done. Wheeler missed a 3-pointer for the lead on the ensuing possession, and had a second look after an offensive rebound by Candice Dupree. After a timeout, Indiana made a last-gasp effort beginning with a necessary stop on the defensive end.

Pressuring Diggins near midcourt, Briann January's steal with 5 seconds left set up a final scramble. January dribbled through traffic past midcourt and found Wheeler for a 3-pointer on the baseline. The shot beat the buzzer, but missed the mark, bounding off the back of the rim as Indiana lost a heartbreaker and fell for the seventh time in eight games.
